

Bill Gates Partner GAVI Vaccine Alliance Wants To Criminalize Memes

TRUTH11.COM

Feb 22, 2024 3 min

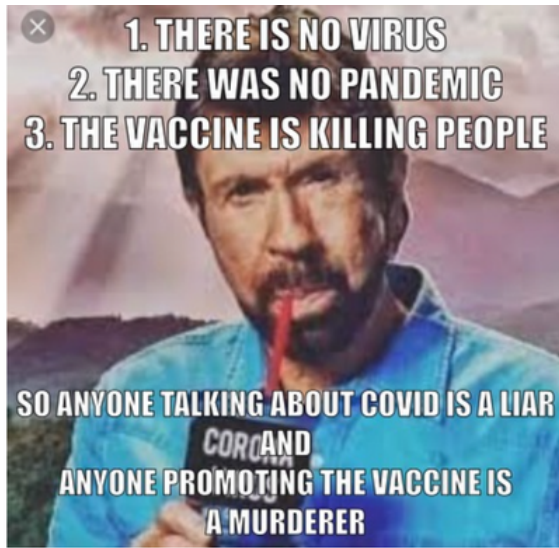

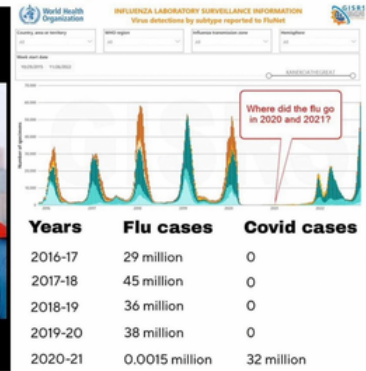

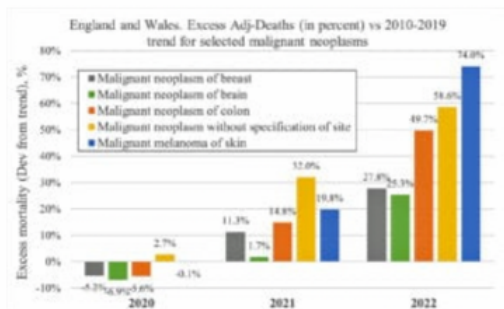

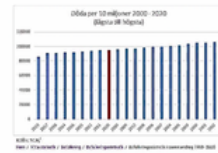

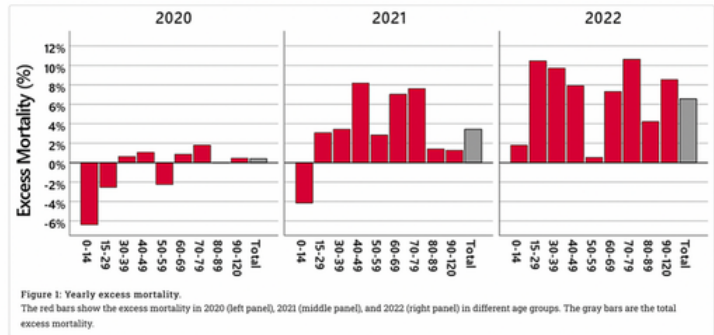

Figure 1 illustrates that the deviation of the observed mortality from the expected mortality is not uniform over the different age groups and that the pattern across the age groups changes from 2020 to 2021 and 2022.

Dylan Eleven • Truth11.com

Memes are getting the truth out there. So much so, they are considered a threat to their genocidal vaccine plans.

Subscribe

They feel it is memes that are responsible for people not getting more vaccines.

Never mind the actual death and destruction statistics, and multiple studies around the world showing 17 million people have been killed by the vaccine.

Never mind the death and destruction caused by the vaccines, directly witnessed by the population.

They are trying to say it's memes that are causing people to doubt the medical murderers, not their genocidal actions.

It is quite clear they are scrambling to try and keep the truth suppressed and harm those who are speaking out. Quite pathetic.

Banning memes won't keep them from swinging from the gallows at the Nuremberg 2.0 trials, that will eventually be demanded by the masses. There will be many a meme created to celebrate that event when it happens.

Memes will outlast the genocidal government.

ReclaimTheNet.org | Didi Rankovic

An international group promoting vaccines with ties to the Gates Foundation in going after memes. Whatever could make more sense?

But things here aren't as haphazard as they might seem. Bill Gates is known, and rich, for two things: as the founder of one of the most oppressive (in terms of design, security, and historically predatory toward free-as-in-freedom competing technology) companies ever – Microsoft.

And the other is Gates – now as a billionaire – reinventing himself through his “uncanny valley” philanthropic efforts, centered and emanating from his Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation, and focusing by and large on all sorts of vaccines, and – agriculture.

One of those involved, the GAVI Vaccine Alliance (that gets money from Gates) now wants to reframe memes – internet’s succinct expression of humor and satire – as “health disinformation super-spreaders.”

And we’ve heard this one before – this genre, that, in the digital age, might as well be considered as any other artistic format in previous times, is said to be capable of evading “fact checkers and content moderators” (i.e., censors).

In previous eras and authoritarian states, that would get the books with imagery and words characteristic of memes banned or burned.

So what could be the solution in the current era? And what does the big picture amount to?

Well, it’s just Bill Gates going after a free and open internet again, only by other means – cynics might say.

But here’s what a blog post on GAVI’s site says: “Our research shows that memes form part of a highly sophisticated strategy to spread and monetize health disinformation.”

When the “research” is done – (including assertions such as that memes falsely “depicted unvaccinated people as unfairly stigmatized” – well tell that to tennis superstar Novak Djokovic who almost got his career ruined by actual unfair stigmatization) – come the conclusions:

“Influencers promoting vaccine hesitancy use memes to build their online following, sow distrust of health authorities and profit from the promotion of unapproved medicines. This enables them to evade responsibility for any negative consequences of their messaging.”

There’s a “call to action” too, basically – to formally criminalize memes.

Says GAVI: “Memes may not look threatening – but that’s why they are such effective super spreaders of health disinformation.”

So then, what is GAVI, in its own words?

“As a founding partner of GAVI, the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation has brought international attention to the cause of immunization and has made several commitments to GAVI, totaling US$ 4.1 billion to date.”

Source

Original Article: <https://reclaimthenet.org/bill-gates-partner-gavi-vaccine-alliance-targets-online-memes>

Related:

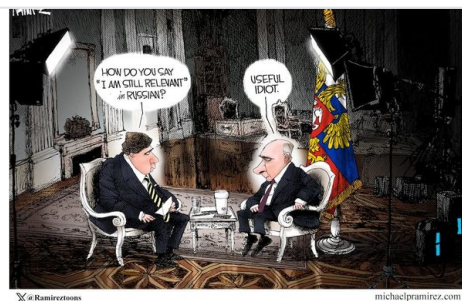

The truth is told very well with images. A picture says a thousand words, and memes a few more. These pages have lots of images and memes that focus on the truth.

IMAGES + MEMES - Truth11.com

Truth11.com is an independent media site, dedicated to the truth and true journalism. Armed With The Truth, United We Stand. Th...

Truth11.com

Subscribe to Truth11.com

Receive Articles By Email • Support Independent Media

 Subscribe now

Support Truth11.com • Make A Donation

• Or Become A Monthly Subscriber

TRUTH11.COM | Armed With The Truth • United We Stand